

Process & Decision Documentation

Significant decision or change:

Change the win and loss mechanism into a “Fairy Tale Stimulator” that gives a short background story and different options, which allow users to choose and lead to different endings.

Why did you make it:

To add complete logic, with interesting option pages that allow users to interact more.

What effect did it have on the work:

Showing the background story on the start page, then showing each chapter with two options, and the final ending pages.

Feb.3, 2025	ChatGPT5.2	Help create text information	Created a short story based on the prompt I provided	I gave new prompts to ask for shorter content and require a change in the story perspective to first person to make the overall interaction more fluent and more immersive	I read through each short story from the feedback to check if the story's values and wording are positive and meet my requirements. If not, I did give new prompts	All the coding part	At first, the feedback was too long and did not have a clear structure that not meet my prompt required

Summary of Process (Human + Tool)

For Side Quest 3, my idea is to create a random page switching mechanism with a storyline based on the initial code provided on Learn. Before writing code, I clarified the constraints of the story structure, like the length of the story and how many switches I want throughout the story, and the endings. Then I put these requirements as prompts in ChatGPT 5.2. Through the process, I adjusted the story length, perspective, and option number since these directly affected how the logic would be implemented. After each change, I double-checked the storyline to make sure its paths are working and will all go to the two endings. To finalize the story, I tested the logic by mentally and coding on Visual Studio Code. To set up the pages for different options in the story, and then try to connect them with each chapter of the story that the AI provided. Then, I simulated multiple runs to ensure that randomness did not create dead ends or infinite loops.

Decision Points & Trade-offs

One key decision I made was to change the complexity of the storyline and the number of switch options. First, I decided to include five switch options that align with the story, but this created a bug when I tested switching between different pages. When I clicked on the button, one of them was not linked to the page it was supposed to be. Therefore, chose to reduce the switch option to three. To have better controll on the decision points so the logic is fluent while still allowing randomness. Another decision I made is to standardize each story chapter to a similar length and format, which limited narrative detail but made the coding structure easier to see and manage.

Appendix

My Prompt:

I'm working on a coding task that requires me to play around with the random pages switching, can u write a multi-ending short short story with 5 different switch choices in between, which lead to two different ending, can u make the story genre a fairy tale

ChatGPT 5.2:

The Fairy Tale of the Wandering Star

Once upon a quiet night, a small star fell into the forest, landing softly beside you.
It flickers like a candle, as if waiting.

A whisper drifts through the trees:
“Choose wisely.”

Choice 1

- Pick up the glowing star → go to PAGE 2
- Leave it and follow the forest path → go to PAGE 3

PAGE 2 — The Star’s Promise

The star warms your hands and hums with magic.
Images flash: castles, storms, a crown made of light.

The star grows brighter when you think of helping others, dimmer when you think of keeping it.

Choice 2

- Promise to protect the star → go to PAGE 4
- Ask the star for power → go to PAGE 5

PAGE 3 — The Talking Woods

The forest awakens. Trees lean closer. Mushrooms glow softly.

A fox with silver eyes speaks:
“The star changes those who choose for themselves... and those who choose for others.”

Choice 3

- Follow the silver fox → go to PAGE 4
- Ignore it and walk alone → go to PAGE 5

Moonlight reveals a ring of dancing fairies.
They stop when they see you.

“The star must decide its keeper,” they say.

“Or it will decide for you.”

Choice 4

- Place the star in the center of the circle → go to PAGE 6
- Hide the star and run away → go to PAGE 7

A castle of black thorns rises before you.

The star (or your heart) pulses faster here.

A door opens on its own.

Choice 5

- Enter the thorn castle → go to PAGE 7
- Turn back toward the forest light → go to PAGE 6

ENDING A — PAGE 6: The Gentle Ending

The star lifts from your hands and rises into the sky.

It becomes brighter than before, joining the constellations.

The forest sighs in relief.

Fairies return to their dances.

The fox bows.

From that night on, lost travelers always find their way—guided by one slightly brighter star.

And though no one remembers your name,
the world is kinder because of you.

✨ THE END (Ending A) ✨

ENDING B — PAGE 7: The Twisted Ending

The star darkens.

Magic floods the air, bending to your will.

The castle seals itself behind you.

You gain everything you wished for—power, gold, a crown.

But the sky loses a star that night.

And in the forest, fairies whisper a warning to children:

*“Some endings grant wishes...
but steal the light forever.”*

● THE END (Ending B) ●

My Prompt:

I'm working on a coding task that requires me to play around with the random page switching. Can you write a multi-ending short story with 5 different switch choices in between, which lead to two different endings? can u write the story genre as a fairy tale and in a first-person perspective? Give a short background as the start page, each page about 3-4 lines
